Playwrights Project
Where Stories Take the Stage

BEYOND PRISON WALLS

These creative and thought-provoking plays take us on surprising journeys, exploring issues of personal identity, friendship, responsibility, mental health, hope, and the afterlife. Plays were written by participants in Playwrights Project's arts in corrections programs at Centinela State Prison and Richard J. Donovan Correctional Facility. Alumni and students in SDSU's School of Theatre, Television and Film will direct and perform the plays. Each performance includes all of the plays and is followed by a conversation with audience, artists, alumni and representatives from correctional facilities.
